Bandolier of Plentiful Pouches

This purple silk bandolier is designed to be worn diagonally across the chest, from shoulder to hip, over clothing, robes or armor. It is as strong as heavy canvas or leather, yet it is as light, flexible and comfortable as fabric. At first examination, it has 10 pouches each capable of holding a single coin, gem, flask, scroll, vial or similar tiny item weighing one pound or less. When actually worn, a closer examination by the wearer reveals that each of the 10 pouches actually contains 10 pouches, each capable of holding materials as listed above. The wearer of the bandolier always knows exactly what is in each pouch, and can remove a desired object as a move action which does not provoke an attack of opportunity. Regardless of how many of the pouches are filled, the bandolier never weighs more than 2 pounds.

Paper Armor

(armor)

This rare armor is made of carefully pressed and lacquered paper, rather than metal, making it wearable by druids. The armor weighs only 15 pounds, and is treated as Light armor for purposes of determining movement and other limitations. It allows a maximum Dexterity bonus of +5, carries an armor check penalty of -1 and has an arcane spell failure chance of 10%.

Blessing of Pietos

For your act of mercy in granting Kastri's last request, Pietos has bestowed upon you the ability to lay on hands once per week as if you were a paladin of the level indicated below. Furthermore, you may augment this healing gift with a mercy. If you are already a paladin, your lay on hands and mercy abilities are treated as if you were a paladin of one level higher. If you are already a paladin of Pietos, your lay on hands and mercy abilities are treated as if you were a paladin of two levels higher. This blessing will fade after one years.
